Colleges.

In an editorial headed "The State Board and the Colleges," published in this week's Issue of the Religious iterald, the Baptist journal of this city a note of warning is sounded regarding the relationship between the independent, nontax-supported colleges of Virginia, and the State Board of Education, with its almost unimisted power.

The subject under discussion is the fifter of the State board to establish couractional standards for colleges and universities. When these standards are adopted, and an inspection by some representative of the board proves satisfactory, such colleges will be registered and their graduates given license to teach in the public schools without examination. Overtures of this sort were made last February to Richmond College, but at the meeting of the trustees of that institution held graduates large Parker of the party for President, should begin by taking the content of the trustees of that institution held graduates large Parker once his

Mr. Hay has no statement to make now concerning the situation, for the reason that he doesn't know what will be done and poss'bly will not know for two weeks. In the meantime it is the opinion of those members of the House interested in the matter that the best that can be hoped for would be for the encampments to be held in August and September, provided then all the congressional red tape is unwound and the matter hastened with special promptness.
